

Denver Regional Transportation District uses Interalia's passenger information system

Background and Challenge:

When Interalia Systems Corp. (Envitech Communication) bought an analog communication technology intended for rail transit systems, it decided to develop and support this product by building its reputation on the rail transit market. Experiencing major problems with its passenger information systems, the Denver Regional Transportation District (RTD) was a customer Interalia now knew how to help, and so Interalia came on board to bring the RTD rail transit system to a new level of excellence.

The Solution and Results:

Working hand-in-hand with RTD and providing them with regular updates and product enhancements, Interalia put in two years of hard work to bring the system up to the level both parties required, providing exceptional products and excellent customer support. Confident after seeing these results, RTD went on to ask Interalia to provide its innovative standard-based digital communication system not only for the RTD fleet of new T-Rex light rail vehicles, but also for the retrofit of RTD's existing fleet.

The Company:

The Denver Regional Transportation District, or RTD, was organized in 1969 and is the regional authority operating public transit services in eight of the twelve counties in the Denver-Aurora-Boulder Combined Statistical Area in Colorado. The RTD operates and maintains a mass transportation system for 2.6 million people in 40 municipalities plus two cities. It employs 2,510 people and reported over 86 million boardings in 2005 and 2006. The RTD has 91 train vehicles, 37 stations and 1060 buses.
